SUMMER 2017

Keep your kids sharp this summer and head to the library!

It's a documented fact that kids who do not actively engage their brain during the summer months tend to lose some of what they've learned during the prior academic year. Many teachers lament the fact that they have to spend the early part of each new school year helping students get caught up.

In a 2009 government web cast, Secretary of Education Arne Duncan described this summer learning loss as "devastating." Studies estimate that summer breaks cause the average student to lose up to one month of instruction, with disadvantaged students being disproportionately affected (Cooper, 1996). Fortunately, your local library offers an easy and inexpensive way to help combat learning loss: Summer reading!

Oregon College Savings Planner Tips

Keep your college savings on track by setting up an automatic contribution plan. And don't forget to ask friends and family to contribute as gifts.

Are your investments allocated appropriately for your beneficiary's age? You can rebalance up to twice per calendar year.

Time to start paying for school? You can send money directly to the institution.

You can manage all these activities by logging into your account at OregonCollegeSavings.com.

Most public libraries offer some form of summer reading program to keep kids intellectually stimulated when they are out of school. Reading programs are targeted by age group and many libraries offer prizes or other incentives to encourage the reading of multiple books during the summer. Barbara Heyn (1978) found that "More than any other public institution, including schools, public libraries contribute to the intellectual growth of children during the summer." In a 2001 study prepared for the Pennsylvania Library Association, Drs. Celano and Neumann monitored differences between children participating in public library summer reading programs and those involved in local recreational summer programs. They concluded that, in addition to literacy-related activities, children in library programs benefited academically from story hours, arts and crafts, and other special events designed to enhance the reading experience.

Read a book. Save for College. Build a Better World.

In Oregon, there is even more reason to head to your public library during the summer. The Oregon College Savings Plan is giving away fifteen $529 college savings accounts to families participating in their local library's summer reading program. Libraries have been supplied with entry forms for patrons to enter. Parents/grandparents/guardians simply complete and mail a postage paid entry on behalf of a child by August 25. Winners will be randomly selected (up to three per each of the five Oregon congressional districts) and each winner's library will also receive a $500 award for future programs. (Void where prohibited. No purchase required. Read official rules at OregonCollegeSavings.com. Sponsored by the Oregon College Savings Plan).

The Oregon College Savings Plan is also arranging for free entertainment at more than 70 small public libraries around the state so be sure to check with your library to schedule your visit during a free performance.

Remember, you and your family can have some fun, avoid the "summer slide" and learn about saving for college all for free at your local public library. For more information, visit OregonCollegeSavings.com.
